Sedna times ?

In the view of many astrologers, Pluto has strongly influenced the 20th century, both in terms of global events and personal fates, since at least its discovery in 1930, even though it is now clear that Pluto is just one of several objects of similar size in a similar orbit.

Just like Pluto is the first discovered object beyond the orbit of Neptune, Sedna is the first discovered object from a region quite a bit further out. Since births are so crucial in astrology, could being discovered first be a crucial factor regarding which objects get how much weight ?

Would Sedna thus maybe be a major factor in current astrology? Would Sedna rule Libra, and would currently be well placed in Taurus?

Just some teasers, feel free to investigate more.

The world is moving away from nuclear power; countries that want to build nuclear weapons are tamed with economic sanctions. In 2009 President Obama held a speech for a nuclear-free world in Prague, the same city in which in 2006 it was decided that Pluto is no longer scientifically classified as a planet.

In 2004, the year Sedna was discovered in photos from autumn 2003, the video "1 Night in Paris" came out, which arguably launched a new kind of celebrities who are famous even without conventional skills for stardom like, for example, singing or acting, but rather by just being desirable.

Since then cameras have essentially turned away from objects towards the persons taking them, selfies, just like Venus looking at herself in the mirror (see the glyph for planet Venus). The whole internet has become even more focussed on money, plus beauty, community, and so on.

It might even be so that male state leaders and other (plutonic) men in powerful positions are no longer in absolute power, but rather at most tolerated; the "me too" revelations appear not unlikely to be part of this, too.

It may seem strange that the apparently helpless young woman in the Inuit myth would have such an effect, since she appears to be so much a victim there, but is it exactly that experience which makes her stronger than Pluto?

Remember that Natascha Kampusch managed to escape her kidnapper in Vienna after eight years of captivity just one day before the deciding vote on Pluto in Prague on 24 August 2006?
