Web 2009

Richer in content (but also of more varying quality) than most versions before and after until about 2015.

- architecture – Click on my email on the top-left corner for separate overviews for readers coming from science, astrology or philosophy.
- elementary philosophy and the first subsection of evolutions – Basically the same fundamental idea about describing elements in terms of in/out and rest/move as is still the foremost topic on my website today (2016).
- long-range feelings – Various considerations around the nature and potential range of feelings and how that could potentially explain many phenomena in this world quite uniformly.
- elementary star signs – My model of the star signs in terms of transformations between the four greek elements.
- magic carpets – An explanation of my general method of association for exploring symbolic worlds and some applications involving astrology and ancient Chinese culture.
- moebius lego – A text that I would now (2016) classify as some kind of precognition of my explorations of “the moon” that followed in 2010, in two versions, one possibly typed only with my left hand.
- reflectivity – Some rumination on science and my personal odyssey.

Web 2016

This website as of 5 August 2016, on which the book exactphilosophy.net 2016 is based.

web2016.zip

Features the first publication of my arrangement of the 8 trigrams of the I Ching as 8 transitions between the four elements in Aristotle's circle.

Web 2017

This website as of early December 2017, on which the book exactphilosophy.net 2017 is based.

web2017.zip

Features many refinements and new leads in the web pages, a careful article about the 8 trigrams of the I Ching as 8 transitions between the four elements in Aristotle's circle, or even arranged on a Möbius strip, and more.
